

Ramiro Alvarez is an aspiring public speaker, artist, and healer from Durango, Mexico currently living in Southwest Detroit. With dance, comedy, history, and the power of group dialogue as his tools, Ramiro hopes to be of service to the communities that helped him grow and change. Ramiro imagines a world where movements are more connected--a world where environmental issues, HIV/AIDS stigma, disability, and racism are not seen as separate systems of injustice, but as one interwoven tapestry of inaccessibility and violence. Ramiro strives to center youth voices and power at every chance they get, believing firmly that intergenerational movements are the most liberating and sustainable.
